BACAS offers a wide variety of technical skills including geophysics, surveying, research, computer graphics, technical illustration, conservation and, above all, archaeological fieldwork. This is made possible by the efforts and whole-hearted support of our enthusiastic membership.

The high standards of our fieldwork have led to the Society being British Archaeological Awards finalists three times, winning twice. We have also featured both in the Time Flyers and twice, in the Time Team TV series.

We are firmly committed to bringing an enjoyment and understanding of archaeology to the general public.

Members receive a copy of our annual journal, Camertonia, with articles and reports on BACAS projects and members' projects which BACAS have helped with.

The society has recently initiated a long term research project to investigate the archaeology of the Lansdown plateau. The first of the identified sites has just seen the completion of a geophysical survey. There are other similar events occurring throughout the summer including planned excavations at Keynsham and Saltford.

The Bath and Counties Archaeological Society (BACAS) was established in 1949 as the Camerton Excavation Club, focusing initially on the Roman villa and settlement of Camerton, south of Bath.

Well-known members of the Society have included the late William Wedlake and Sir Mortimer Wheeler, who was president for many years.

BACAS is one of the leading societies in the UK. Our membership spans all age groups and we have qualified and experienced archaeologists working to professional standards across all areas of our activities.

We aim to provide a variety of opportunities to experience archaeology through active research, hands-on learning and lectures. Members are able to attend our excavations and geophysical surveys, as well as our summer excursions programme. Through the winter months we run a series of lectures. The programme is wide-ranging, covering a variety of periods, locations, and subjects.

Whether you are an experienced archaeologist or just contemplating this enjoyable activity, please contact our Membership Secretary for further details:
